Kaiden Jericho's life has been about rocking it like a solo artist, now he has to deal with a partner. Who is he going to work with, and will that partner be able to handle him... Including his (shall we say) slightly inflated ego of himself? Even if that ego is deserved, just a little? Chief is learning to be a little more supportive, except when Chief of Security Wulfson decides a few students deserve a little more intense training. With all of the additional injuries Kaiden suffers in his extra-curricular training, will he succumb to the blue goop pain killer? You don't become the best of the best by staying alive. With the Animus, you are closer to perfection with each death you suffer. For Kaiden Jericho, he'd rather skip the death part, thank-you-very-much. In CO-OP Kaiden has to figure out how best to work with a partner, someone who is as good in their profession as he is in his. Join Kaiden as he learns about Nexus, the Animus and the opportunities that one fight brought him. Never has helping someone benefitted him so much. The future is looking bright, except for the pain. This Madness is going to end one way or another. If Kaiden has his way, it will end violently, with his hands around the neck of the one who killed his friend. AO has pushed to the extreme, now the Academy students are making a difference. Will they be in time? It's the final do-or-die engagements to bring this war to a conclusion. Will Kaiden's friends be able to win all the battles so they can push through the final defenses? Kaiden might be a genius when it comes to destruction, but the other side has the greatest warship on the planet. It's about even. Kaiden, plus the rest of the academy students and faculty, are working to take down the AO's greatest threat. The City-Killer. Will they be able to destroy the ship that forced them from their homes? If they do, what will be the cost? Buy Now to discover the plan...and the costs. - You don't become the best of the best by staying alive. The Nightpath Trilogy continues as old grudges come calling, with hell to pay. It's been a year since Eskander and company saved the underclasses of San Francisco from certain annihilation, and the spymaster has been working diligently for King Thog'run of Aurichome, who happens to offer great dental. A new threat appears as old grudges rear their ugly heads, forcing the former NIGHT agent and his companions to contend with a powerful form of wizardry that bridges magic with machinery: Technomancy.

Kaiden Jericho is taking another test. This time it's with his friends, but something is amiss. Not everything is at it seems and no one has found Gin Sonny...yet. Gin must test himself against any and all who beat him. He needs a new device to track down and help destroy one of the victims who got away. Will anyone realize that Gin hasn't left Earth? Will Kaiden understand what is different about this test he is undergoing? This time, the 'test' has real-world consequences. --- You don't become the best of the best by staying alive. A LitRPG with heavy fantasy action, several references to mythology, and a compelling story that pits the parallels of normal life against the drama of a post-apocalyptic starscape, Ascendant: Online is a unique take on the genre that doesn't disappoint.

Kaiden wants a little information, and perhaps a little payback... He has information on where an AO stronghold is located to retrieve vital proof needed to help get the council to believe the ghost-like organization exists. But, can he get the support he needs to make a run on it? Before long, it becomes obvious this isn't a small outpost. More like a major outpost with a lot of support. Kaiden can't wing this operation. He has to start working out his relationships to acquire even a small chance of success. Sasha, Wolfson and Dr. Laurie are helping him... But he needs more. He decides to recruit support from the gangs he knows. The good, the bad... and those he has pissed off. Will they welcome him with open arms, or smiles as they eye him through their weapons sights? Will they at least be not-hostile? Or will his friends need to come and help back him up? Will the AO find out that they are under attack in time to prepare? This time, the Ark Academy elite are getting involved. This isn't a game... Anymore. - You don't become the best of the best by staying alive. A fleet of warships operated by the digitized minds of former humans. An unknown enemy lurking in the dark of space. The one man who hopes to conquer them both. Jain was the lieutenant commander of an elite SEAL team. He was accustomed to order and discipline, which he used to give the men under his command that particular brand of killer instinct his unit was known for. But one day that semi-comfortable, ordered life ended when he opened his eyes to find his body replaced by a starship. His mind had become its AI core. He is somewhere in deep space. Most of his systems are badly damaged. He has no memory of how he got here, or what his mission is. Evidence points to an attack by an unknown entity. He finds other damaged vessels in the vicinity and reactivates them. They, too, have no memory of the events leading up to their current situation. Jain, thrust into a leadership role, soon learns that commanding a fleet of starships isn't all that different from leading a platoon of SEALs. It helps that his database is chock-full of tactics and military strategies gleaned from every space battle humanity has ever fought. As he and his fleet explore their surroundings and slowly piece together what happened to them, they realize their attacker is not from any human system. And that any misstep means not only the loss of his fleet, but potentially all of humanity itself.

"Depth psychologist and wilderness guide Plotkin offers advice on recognizing and healing inner wounds and destructive patterns of behavior, which can develop into subpersonalities such as inner critics, victims, escapists, rescuers, and so on, with the goal of growing into an integrated, healthy adult- and elder-hood"--
