Orientation to Home Care Nursing is a comprehensive reference text that covers all aspects of home health nursing. This text can be used as a primary text for home care and community nursing courses. Or it can be used concurrently with the agency's own materials to apply learned material to daily practice or with students who are learning about home care. This companion text to the Manual of Home Care Nursing Orientation, by the same authors, provides the nurse with an in-hand reference for orientation and beyond.

Individuals with disabilities, chronic conditions, and functional impairments need a range of services and supports to keep living independently. However, there often is not a strong link between medical care provided in the home and the necessary social services and supports for independent living. Home health agencies and others are rising to the challenges of meeting the needs and demands of these populations to stay at home by exploring alternative models of care and payment approaches, the best use of their workforces, and technologies that can enhance independent living. All of these challenges and opportunities lead to the consideration of how home health care fits into the future health care system overall. On September 30 and October 1, 2014, the Institute of Medicine and the National Research Council convened a public workshop on the future of home health care. The workshop brought together a spectrum of public and private stakeholders and thought leaders to improve understanding of the current role of Medicare home health care in supporting aging in place and in helping high-risk, chronically ill, and disabled Americans receive health care in their communities. Through presentations and discussion, participants explored the evolving role of Medicare home health care in caring for Americans in the future, including how to integrate Medicare home health care into new models for the delivery of care and the future health care marketplace. The workshop also considered the key policy reforms and investments in workforces, technologies, and research needed to leverage the value of home health care to support older Americans, and research priorities that can help clarify the value of home health care. This summary captures important points raised by the individual speakers and workshop participants.

"Nurses play a vital role in improving the safety and quality of patient car -- not only in the hospital or ambulatory treatment facility, but also of community-based care and the care performed by family members. Nurses need know what proven techniques and interventions they can use to enhance patient outcomes. To address this need, the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality (AHRQ), with additional funding from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, has prepared this comprehensive, 1,400-page, handbook for nurses on patient safety and quality -- Patient Safety and Quality: An Evidence-Based Handbook for Nurses. (AHRQ Publication No. 08-0043)."--Online AHRQ blurb, http://www.ahrq.gov/qual/nurseshdbk.

As more people live longer, the need for quality long-term care for the elderly will increase dramatically. This volume examines the current system of nursing home regulations, and proposes an overhaul to better provide for those confined to such facilities. It determines the need for regulations, and concludes that the present regulatory system is inadequate, stating that what is needed is not more regulation, but better regulation. This long-anticipated study provides a wealth of useful background information, in-depth study, and discussion for nursing home administrators, students, and teachers in the health care field; professionals involved in caring for the elderly; and geriatric specialists.

"The purpose of this study was to investigate the long-term efficacy of in-home skilled nursing visits and what interventions contributed to a lowered or normal blood pressure and medication adherence in an older, multicultural managed care population in the Twin Cities. The population chosen for the study were members aged 50 and above who were enrolled in Metropolitan Health Plan's (MHP) Diabetes/Cardiovascular Disease Management Program and had a diagnosis of Hypertension. Registered nurses from a contracted home care agency were prepared as interviewers and data collectors for the study. Data was collected at pre- and post-interventions. Information was obtained from participants at each in-home skilled nursing visit regarding adherence with their prescribed medication regimen. Based on their answers to the question, "Have you forgotten to take any of your medications?" participants were classified into two adherence categories; those who never forgot to take their medications (n=41), and those who sometimes forgot to take their medications (n=20). Participants who never forgot to take their antihypertensive medications were more than twice as likely to see an improvement in their blood pressure classification category over their participation in the CDC Grant Study on Hypertension, and this was statistically significant. Using blood pressure classifications as published in the Seventh Report of the Joint National Committee on Prevention, Detection, Evaluation, and Treatment of High Blood Pressure (JNC 7) (2003), out of the 61 members who participated beyond the baseline visit, the blood pressure of approximately 44% (n=27) of the participants did not change, 30% (n=18) of participants improved their blood pressure, and in 26% (n=16) of the participants their blood pressure worsened with in-home skilled nursing visits. Findings must be viewed with caution given the small sample size, the nature of the participants self-reporting of medication adherence, and participants remaining in the study after the initial visit."--leaves 5-6.

Historically, community health nursing has responded to the changing health care needs of the community and continues to meet those needs in a variety of diverse roles and settings. Community Health Nursing: Caring for the Public's Health, Second Edition reflects this response and is representative of what communities signify in the United States--a unified society made up of many different populations and unique health perspectives. This text provides an emphasis on population-based nursing directed toward health promotion and primary prevention in the community. It is both community-based and community-focused, reflecting the current dynamics of the health care system. The Second Edition contains new chapters on disaster nursing and community collaborations during emergencies. The chapters covering Family health, ethics, mental health, and pediatric nursing have all been significantly revised and updated.

Here's the brand new third edition of the very popular Home Care Nursing Handbook -- considered by readers as a "beacon of excellence" in home care nursing. Now better than ever, this book that so many nurses have turned to for immediate, excellent advice, has been significantly expanded. It is reorganized for quicker access to expert guidance & devotes separate chapters to interventions for each impairment. Use this guide every day to assess situations quickly, develop efficient plans of care, provide accurate intervention strategies, document patient care quickly & precisely, promote quality patient outcomes--in the shortest number of contacts , & so much more. This book is a vital addition to critical pathways, point-of-care computer systems, & OASIS data collection.
